

RIGHTVISION NEWSWIRE

YOUR LEGAL PATHWAY TO GLOBAL FINANCIAL MARKETS

rightvision
Securities (Pvt.) Limited
Invest with Right Vision

September 15th 2026

No Major Economic Events Today

Did You Know?

Yemen's Iran-aligned Houthis launched a new attack on Saudi Arabia on Monday and Gulf Arab states postponed planned talks with Iran, raising concerns the Middle East conflict could spread further and threaten global oil supplies.

The Houthis on Monday said they fired dozens of missiles and drones at a military airbase in Khamis Mushait in southern Saudi Arabia, targeting aircraft hangars, radar systems, runways and ammunition depots in retaliation for Saudi airstrikes in Yemen. Saudi authorities issued emergency alerts there and in three other southern cities.

The action followed an attack on Saudi Arabia on Friday, which Riyadh blamed on Iran-backed fighters in Iraq. That knocked out the country's east-west pipeline, which allows Gulf oil exports to bypass the blockaded Strait of Hormuz.

Further pressuring global oil supplies, the Houthis have advanced rapidly in Yemen in recent days, capturing territory including Perim Island at the mouth of the Red Sea on Friday

www.rvspk.com

Gold

Gold prices edged lower on Tuesday, slipping back below $4,300 an ounce after falling more than 1% in the previous session, as a firmer dollar and elevated Treasury yields reinforced pressure on bullion ahead of the Federal Reserve's policy decision.

Higher oil prices, Treasury yields and a firmer dollar have added to pressure on bullion, although longer-term investor demand remains supportive.

Gold has come under renewed pressure after falling to a five-week low on Monday, with spot bullion now slipping below $4,300 as investors reassess the impact of higher energy prices, Treasury yields and the firmer dollar on the Fed's policy outlook.

Markets are now pricing about a 92% probability of a Fed rate increase this week, as higher energy costs raise the risk that inflation will remain elevated.

Higher borrowing costs tend to weigh on gold because bullion does not pay interest, making yield generating assets more attractive when rates rise.

Inside The News

Oil prices rose sharply on Tuesday, extending recent gains as more Houthi attacks on Saudi Arabia spurred increased concerns over supply disruptions in the Middle East.

Talks between Iran and Gulf powers on reopening the Strait of Hormuz also remained on hold, adding to concerns over global supplies and keeping crude's risk premium in play.

Yemen's Iran-aligned Houthis on Monday launched more strikes against Saudi Arabia, as the group dug into key positions along the Red Sea.

Said positions also allowed the group to carry out more attacks on shipping through the Bab al-Mandab strait, threatening oil supplies in the region.

The Houthis attacked several targets in Saudi Arabia on Monday, further threatening the country's oil exports after strikes last week took Riyadh's east-west pipeline offline.

The Houthi offensive opened up a new front in the Middle Eastern conflict, with analysts estimating an additional 4% to 5% of global supplies could be disrupted from the development.

Crude Oil

The Euro (EUR) is down 0.12% at around 1.1535 against the US Dollar (USD) in the early European trading session on Tuesday. The major currency pair is under pressure even as a slew of European Central Bank (ECB) officials have warned of upside inflation risks, which have fuelled expectations of one more interest rate hike this year.

On Thursday, the ECB raised its key policy rates by 25 basis points (bps), as expected, and warned that more hikes could follow. Meanwhile, the US Dollar's outperformance on expectations that the Federal Reserve (Fed) will hike interest rates on Wednesday is significantly hurting the major currency pair. At press time, the US Dollar Index (DXY), which tracks the Greenback's value against six major currencies, trades 0.18% higher to near 99.64.

Inside The News

Front-month gas futures for October delivery on the New York Mercantile Exchange rose 5.2 cents, or 1.8percent, to USD2.883 per million British thermal units

Natural Gas is locked in a technical standoff on the 5-hour chart, closing its latest forming bar at $2.899—right at a resistance zone where bull and bear scenarios are set for a showdown. Both breakout and breakdown risks are escalating, making this a textbook moment for tactical patience as volatility brews.

Before the Break: Compression Builds

The current price of Natural Gas sits at $2.899, wedged between the 20 SMA support at $2.843 and heavy resistance from both the 50 SMA ($2.903) and SuperTrend ($2.906). An ascending triangle pattern is 80% complete, hinting at an imminent decisive move—yet volume is actually declining at this critical resistance, casting doubt on any move's sustainability.

Contact us to trade in regulated exchange of Pakistan and enjoy the premier brokerage experience with RightVisionSecurities

THANK YOU !

Disclaimer

This presentation is for informational purposes only and does not constitute investment advice. Investments are subject to market risks